Hello, Ministry of Health

The electromagnetic pulse of a high-altitude nuclear explosion (HEMP) is a known damaging factor that affects electronic equipment, but not people on the ground. This harmful effect is especially dangerous for the infrastructure of country (electricity system, water supply system, communications, medical centers, etc.), since these systems are absolutely not protected.

Today, all types of military equipment are already protected from electromagnetic pulse. There are a large number of protective equipment on the market. But all of them are not suitable for civilian equipment for several important reasons. For civilian equipment other means of protection are needed. Today, no manufacturer produces such protective equipment. That is, this segment of the market is not yet occupied.

Over the past few years, I have designed, built, and tested many new devices and am now looking for a manufacturer and investor. In the appendix you can find a brief description of these devices. Potential customers: electric companies, water supply companies, hospitals and other infrastructure areas.

I have been engaged on my own initiative in research and development of such protection tools for many years and have published several books based on the results of these works, that is, I am a well-known expert in the protection of civilian infrastructure.

As far as I know, no one in the world develops or manufactures such protective equipment specifically designed for civilian infrastructure.

I offer the experience, knowledge and strength I have accumulated over many years to start manufacture with your company investment help the HEMP protection means for civilian infrastructure (see attachment, please).

I would be very grateful for your response to my suggestion.

Best regards,
